THE CHINA MAIL.

HONGKONG, WEDNESDAY, JAN. 19, 1876.

THAT Sir Thomas Wade "disapproves" of the tone of Li Han Chang's memorial regarding the Yunnan affair may be very satisfactory, but the announcement gives rise to some curious speculations.

What on earth did Sir Thomas suppose would be the result of sending Li to Yunnan? So experienced a diplomatist, so great an authority on Chinese ways of doing things, was surely too wary to have been led to believe that any practical result would accrue from Li's mission.

Like the rest of the world, we supposed that Sir Thomas Wade freely knew what he was about, that he expected to find precisely the course of action followed by the Commission which has just been made public, but that he intended in some wonderful way to insist on justice being done all the same.

That Li's memorial can have come upon him as a surprise is incredible. Yet this is gravely asserted by the correspondents of two papers, and the statement has probably a substratum of fact. If so, the last shred of diplomatic ability credited to Mr. Wade must be denied him.

A British minister who could believe that a native commissioner sent to investigate an outrage which occurred in an outlying province eight months before would have either the courage or opportunity to arrive at the truth has arrived at a state of mental incapacity which renders him unfit for his post.

Sir Thomas Wade is in one of two positions. Either he did not expect Li Han Chang to write as he has done, in which case he has been made a fool of; or he did expect such a result, and in that case has taken what we have always called a most peculiar view of his duties.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the assertion about the Minister's opinion is untrue, we cannot conceive in what way he hopes to vindicate his character as a negotiator. Let us admit that he fully expected every effort would be made to evade anything like proper action; that the so-called enquiry would be a sham; and that China would successfully shelter her guilty officials from anything like a proper investigation into their conduct. In what way did he expect to gain the satisfaction he was instructed to obtain? We are told by northern correspondents that the minister "has good cause for what he is doing," that "it would be inexpedient to let the public know what was being done," and a good deal more rubbish of the same sort. We have tried to believe them—and failed. It has been hinted to us that behind all the negotiations our representative has the power of declaring instant war; that such a declaration, if made, will be fully endorsed by the Government; that all this delay is merely submitted to in the hope, cherished solely by Sir Thomas Wade himself, that the Chinese will eventually see the folly of opposing our demands; and that if a certain period be exceeded without satisfaction being given, war is as certain as the rising of to-morrow's sun. Well, this explanation may be true. But what will have been gained by the delay which at Sir Thomas Wade's suggestion has been accorded? Simply, that the first dread of our vengeance will have passed away. Meanwhile China is arming herself in her feeble way, and though that will make no essential difference to our final success, it makes more bloodshed consequent on her increased confidence in her own resources.

Put in the most concise manner the actual difference between Sir Thomas

Wade and the foreign public in China appears to be this: The latter believed that China would never give adequate satisfaction for Mr. Margary's murder unless forced to; and feeling sure that no amount of delay would benefit the matter, urged speedy and decisive measures to obtain it. Sir Thomas, on the other hand, could not give up his belief in Chinese well-meaningness, and begged that they might have time accorded them. This has been done, and we are now seeing the first fruits of the concession. We shall be much mistaken if a very few months does not see us at war with China.

We cannot help again drawing attention to the utter absence of any endeavour to enforce some sort of decency on the part of Chair-coolies. The advent of the cold weather has of course necessitated their taking to winter clothing, which amongst that class of Chinese means quilted jackets in more or less disrepair. We yesterday noted one of these worthies in a jacket which was positively repulsive, the cotton stuffing hanging out in a way that converted its ragged covering into a yet more offensive object. Now, we cannot see what possible objection there can be to insisting upon outward tidiness. Let blue suits or brown be chosen, but let them be uniform, and let thorough care be taken to enforce their being neither ragged nor dirty to an offensive degree. We would also suggest that every chair-coolie be required to wear a badge on his arm inscribed with the words "Licensed chair-coolie." It often happens that one of the proper coolies belonging to a chair goes away and gets some weak-backed friend to officiate for him. The least uphill work tries the substitute, and a dispute then ensues with the fare. Of course the badge system will not provide against this altogether, but it will lessen the chances of incompetent coolies engaging themselves, and at all events the great thing is to make the chair-bearers feel that they are looked after. Why we should tolerate in Hongkong what would not be allowed in any other city we know of, is puzzling. The reason is, we suppose, that a government official looks after such matters in place of a municipal council.

NEARLY every popular outcry follows the well-known simile of the spring which when released flies back, not merely to its normal position, but to some point beyond it. There is therefore nothing very remarkable in the fact that the much-exercised mind of tea-drinking Europe is beginning to discover that gypsum and prussian blue are rather beneficial than otherwise to the leaves thus coated. As it happens this rebound in public opinion is better founded than the original prejudice in the opposite direction. A home contemporary draws attention to the use made of gypsum in checking the undue fermentation of wine, nearly all sherry being thus treated. The detractors of sherry so prepared, says the paper we are quoting, "can scarcely be aware that the superiority of Burton bitter beer is owing to the large amount of gypsum contained in the water of the Trent, and that quite as much of this innocuous substance enters into a pint and a half of that excellent beverage as into any bottle of sherry in existence. In one respect gypsum acts, with regard to the fermentation of beer, precisely in the same way as it acts with reference to that of wine—that is to say, it checks over-activity by counteracting the influence of the excess of nitrogenous matter present alike in wort and must; which troubles bitter-beer brewers in the form of gluten and the Jerez wine-growers in the shape of albumen." It does not, however, appear that gypsum acts chemically in the matter of tea. Its effect when dusted on the newly dried leaf is simply mechanical. By protecting it from the action of moisture while on voyage it prevents fermentation and the amount used being infinitesimal, it is even mechanically innocuous. The action of the prussian blue is of course simply that of a dye, and for this there may possibly be no excuse. But no proof has ever been advanced that in the quantities used it has done harm, and that being so it is no worse than cochineal, which as everybody knows is used to colour a good many articles served up at the table. This being the case the outcry against coloured teas seems to be rather malapropos, and the action of the Home Customs in forbidding the importation of coloured teas amounts to stopping the trade in green teas. However purely green they may be when purchased, the action of the sea air will turn them black while in route home. It seems strange that the leading tea-houses do not urge these facts upon official attention.
